

MERRY-GO-TATS: A BESTIARY, A FABLE

I. COCONUT PARK

On its way to high ruinate merry go round carousel vine draped imagine the plaster cast plastic painted animals pole pinned :

turtle lizard cat and dog rooster goat and cow up and down they spun round and round where now only palm frond and grass bend through wood slat the chain link fence. Admission: from one childhood a father's stamp back handed ink smear; from another a record or 8 track mule and mongrel tabby and hen on their way to play in town Bremen.

II. AT THE GALLIWASP HOUR

we drank fresh guava juice shook off sleep left from naps the lizards a shifting pattern wall papering the plaster when we sat and ate and spoke of black space and brown study how ants roam in patterns scent highways a rush hour of sill counter tile why the cat mews why named chickens can't be eaten

1. What Addie the Dawg Lost

One dog barks, then two. One lab barks. Two Rotweilers listen. Ear prick. Nose sniff.
Body slam the gate. One Rot barks, then two. Addie slinks away. Three dogs bark then four. Echo. Bark. Ark.
Ridge top slope slide carried yard to yard fence to fence wave a comin down the hill.
Addie listens circles nail on tile. Addie spies through the landing's spires.
Barks next door. Barks across the street. Mouth open. No sound. Wave broken message intercepted. Lie down cool down pant concrete nap.

2. Croak Croak Gecko

Addie woke to the croak croak gecko. Go away.
"I think I'll stay. You've lost your bark. You broke the chain." Tief! Addie growled. You stole my sound. "I stole nothing dawg. But I'll croak your spot til you find ya voice." Croak croak gecko bellowed low.

A woman screamed. A man fled. "Tis should be fun." Croak croak belled low again. "Ask dat deh guzoo cow. She'll know." He had no choice. "Go."

3. Saw the Guzoo Cow, Heard Her

Addie found the guzoo cow dining on shadows.
"I know why you've come." Chew chew cud cud. "But your bark's not here." Tief Gecko stole it. "By my wise eyes would de gecko send you here if he stole your pretty bark?" Tail swish. Addie scratched back leg to ear. "Listen dawg—what the gecko no stole you can't reclaim." Chew cud chew. "But what's been lost—seek the three guava trees tethered by the thickest web. When the fruit falls ripe ask to see Isnana's mirror and then, you'll hear—"

III. AT THE PEENY WALLY HOUR

under the guava trees we descended pavers a canopy of webs moon slick dark bodies legs hidden in the glisten strung above us our tongues fresh from mint and lemon-grass we climbed to your room rain ping pang penged the tin roof ran down to the cave where one bubbly susan woke from the walls to bathe

4. Isnana's Mirror

Addie came to the place where the three guavas grew and waited for the ripe fruit to fall. Isnana himself watched the dog sniff each trunk base, its fruit, slid down his web. Addie sniffed the air. You who once spun the ladder to heaven and so removed man's God from Man, I beg let me look upon your fabled mirror, and he raised one paw in the air. "Dear dog a price be paid to gaze pon my pond. Come, look down dere." Isnana gathered his legs. The hound walked down the terrace. His tongue dripped spit on the mud cracks. "Bring back the rain." *But how? "Head first to Cockpit country, then to Nanny's land. Find the shell that bears nine spots.
Collect the dew from Fern Gully and return here."*
Addie lifted his ears but the mud stayed silent.

5. Star Apple Cat

And it was near the time of year man drank of blood and ate of flesh which meant the Star-Apples were ripe when morning flooded Wood side that early lemon light and Addie stumbled upon a curled up cat in the spot where a man's body should have been, green stickers caught on his ears, on his head. Friend cat what has happened? "These stickers—" the cat mrowed. Addie groomed him, plucked the thorny balls with his teeth. Slinky kitty purred through slitted eyes, his white body, gray patches like continents, islands on the blinding morning sea, free and clean.
"Thank you friend dog." Your paw pads are funny, are shaped like the sliced open star apple. Who are you? "When my sister disappeared—cat-napped perhaps ran off with her Tom—she left four newborns. I curled my tail pulled them to my side—teat-less I could not feed them though I tried. For this act my paw pads changed, became like stars and now I can cast a shadow through locked doors—now on this side now on that—pass through the wood slat shutters, perch on tin roofs at midday. Magic some say. But I can't catch the rats. I have no taste for flesh anymore. My food's been cut to encourage the rodent stalk. Rationed.

 Not pulling my weight. Fearful of the master I left, fell in this cleft and slept like a man. Call me Mew." Well, Mew, you are safe now.
Why not come with me, seek a way to bring the rain, fix Isnana's mirror?
 "I would like that. I hear the mirror will show you what you've lost—what have you lost that you would service yourself to Isnana?
I will tell you while we walk. And Mew and Addie went west cross the island.

6. The Goat and the Curse of the Alco Addie and Mew went to cockpit country but no Germaican or Maroon knew of the nine spotted shell. They went to the Blue Mountains the hidden Nanny Town but no spring or coffee bean could help.

 And in Fern Gully's dim endless twilight they could but lick the dew. Even carried in the most makeshift calabash it would vanish in sun or moon.
 "Isnana has tricked you," Mew hissed one day as they found themselves waylaid. "Stuck here on the leeward side land of wood and water—we will find nothing here."
 On Bamboo Avenue

in the copse tunnel straight out of the Twilight Zone they met a goat who roamed roadside all chain leash clink and peg scrape. "Help! They mean to eat me, to make me into jerk!" Calm friend goat.
Come with us and help us on our quest. "What do you seek for a dog to friend a cat?" Addie and Mew told their tales. "Call me Gat.
Can you help with this chain?" Mew slid his star apple paws to loosen the chain from Gat's neck. Addie tugged it over his horns, tossed it with a flick of his jaw. "I think I can help.
There is a place, a bay called Calabash. Women there sing and drum but we must bring them a gift. Chew down that bamboo twisted like a shell." Mew and Addie cut and chewed through the odd growth. Gat read the crude etchings of school children: "Roy was here. Jev was here. 2002."
Gat took them to Treasure Beach and there in the warm water three women stood.
Gat carried the bamboo shell on his head, bowed, dropped it in the sand and they began to drum and call calabash calabash
beaten bottom blood-pump
hear it in the foot stomp
The oldest came forward.
"The Arawak had small dogs which could not bark called Alco. You have the Curse of the Alco. This is Obeah our Myal cannot heal but you will find the nine spotted shell when you least expect it.”

She stepped back and they sang:
calabash calabash
and like a wave they broke into sea spray, left Gat, Mew and Addie to fall asleep on the black sand to the distant reggae floating down like a dream.

IV. AT THE CRAC CRAC HOUR

the fragrance of guava wafted through the louvered shutters through the webbing of the mosquito net's folds and pleats as it fell from its suspended hoop around the bed's edges and we slept spooned and cupped listening to the flute-like ptweek ee ee creak ee ee dum da da crac cracs' metallic speak speak

7. Parrot in the Otaheite Tree

One twilight Addie, Mew and Gat passed a parade, the funeral women dressed in black and white hats.
A parrot perched and laughed in an Otaheite tree. "They think me the man's duppy come back. Not safe!
Not safe!" Flap flap flap. Wait, green feathers. We have been to Cockpit Country, been to the Blue Mountains, been to Bamboo Avenue, Treasure Beach, Negril. Do you know where we can find the nine spotted shell? "No, but me flight might help you get sight. Me have a friend at the docks. He can tell shells from rocks." So the three followed Gold Bill whose squawk made Addie's throat itch—how he longed for a rough ruff, for a long full moon howl.

8. Fought the Cock at the Docks

They returned from country the Bauxite laden land traded red hills and red soil for the city's red lights, the burnt sugar cane replaced by diesel and jerk. They crept aboard a boat its red yellow blue carried them across the harbor motor killed sailed into view prow tied to an off shore pier post swam to the shore city ruins on the sea floor below. One rooster crowed cock a doodle doo. They found the shack the window Gold Bill wanted. Addie climbed upon Gat's back, Mew upon Addie, Gold Bill upon Mew and they heard two roosters crow rasta rasta roo crow cock crow a bwok a bwok a croo.
A lizard leapt from sill to leaf then scurried up the wall. "There he be!"
crawled Gold Bill. A red crest pecked. Men shouted and bills rose in the dust. Peck. Claw.
And then Kinpuppalick!
the final blow but Red Crest saw her come among the men come for the one who won a Chinese bag balanced on her head come for the cock's throat. Gold Bill screeched. Red Crest did his flip his signature move. "Stop!"
The Obeah woman was too slow and soon Red Crest fled with his new friends told his tale: "I knew when to croon, learned how to flip long before the sun rose.

 I'd look through the slats see his hips pulled to the bed edge watch the mosquito coil burn down then squawk at the sight of naked bodies two cocks in one bed like the many cocks kept in my yard and brought to these docks." They asked what he knew if he knew of the nine spotted rock.
 "Not rock. Shell." They could not sleep on the beach fenced off barbed wire, detritus from the cruise ships a feast just out of reach. Gold Bill could fly over and Mew slink through; Addie and Gat were too large and Red Crest could not fly that high so took them to a place where the river met the sea and there by the moonlight they watched the nine spotted island rise, block the sky.

9. The Waters of the Green Turtle

The shell turned. Two half moons reflected the dog, cat and goat, parrot and cock.
 This is the nine spotted shell? A turtle? "Who speaks?" We have crossed this island many times for the nine spotted shell to carry the dew from fern gully and make the rains return.
 "Sounds like Isnana's tricks.
 I will tell you my shell was a stone an unmoored anchor too slippery for the frog and too rough for the rabbit too wet for the cat and too slow for the dragonfly. But what kept them from me kept them here, together like pieces of scorched fabric thrown to the winds that stitch in different patterns but make a quilt once more.

And so if you did taste of fern gully as you say you did, return. Go to Isnana's mirror and do what I tell you.”
And so Addie and crew went on the road one last time, returned to the space between the three guava trees and followed Nine Spot's words. First their pillar: goat, dog, cat and cock, parrot on top. Gold Bill spoke out in Nine Spot's voice: “Waters you stole return!” And all but Addie called and sang.
Their note sent Isnana careening from his tree.
 They caught him in his web, dragged that net to the pool edge where Addie spat three times upon the cracked mud.
 They fixed Isnana's teeth on the dry bed, mixed his venom with Addie's spit and behold the basin filled, not with falling rain but a bubbling spring.
Addie looked within, heard his bark come down the ridge, and carried it back home where sneaking up behind the croak croak gecko he let loose his deepest bark.

The gecko was mid croak and swallowed it whole, throat bursting with the sudden choke. And when the wave came down the slope, glad Addie listened to the note, raised his voice and bellowed low up the scale, held the tone that shook mangoes and limes from the sturdy tree limbs and where each fruit dented the earth a spring rose up one for the dog who found what he lost and one for the lizard who stole his throne; one for the cow who told him of the mirror, one for the spider who duped him; one for the cat who extracted the fanged venom, one for the goat who dragged him; one for flips and spins and the cock's swift blows, and one for the aped turtle's voice that struck fear into the spider's heart.
And one for the turtle, the nine springs, the nine spots feeding the sea, the Curse of the Alco undone.

V. ACKEE TATS

I woke to a full moon. It silvered the mountain clouds erased the peeny wally flash in the tree canopy its light drowned out the ptweek eek eek of the crac cracs inked my skin with the story's tats red as the ackee's poison powder.

Trace the map the heads stacked down my back like the Bremen Town chaps: jowl howl and ballooned gullet, pooled pupils and web stretch mirrored on lats, star apple paws, horn and peg, plumes locked with red crest, totem pole spine balanced on the carapace.
